The Society for Neuro-Oncology will host the 4th Pediatric Neuro-Oncology Basic and Translational Research Conference on June 15 - 16, 2017 at the Wyndham New Yorker Hotel in New York, New York. Building on the success of the previous meetings, this biennial conference encourages the sharing of ideas and results, new collaborations, and offers attendees a state-of-the-art update in the field of pediatric brain tumor research. Mark Kieran, MD, PhD and Daphne Haas-Kogan, MD, both of the Dana Farber Cancer Institute, are serving as Scientific Program Co-Chairs for this conference.

This two-day educational event will bring together a focused multidisciplinary group of researchers and clinician scientists who are committed to improving the outcome of children and adolescents with brain tumors. The target audience of this conference includes pediatric neurosurgeons, interventional neuroradiologists, neuro-oncologists, medical oncologists, radiation oncologists, neuropathologists, scientists/laboratory researchers, industry representatives and trainees.

The 4th Pediatric Neuro-Oncology Basic and Translational Research Conference will provide a forum for sharing the latest laboratory and translational advances in this rapidly changing area. Sessions will cover a wide range of topics including the basic biology pediatric brain tumors, tumor models, genetics/epigenetics, stem cells, signaling and translational therapeutics. The two-day scientific program will feature presentations from a wide range of investigators and thought-leaders as well as oral and poster presentations of original scientific work.

The Society for Neuro-Oncology seeks to make a realistic and positive impact on the field of pediatric neuro-oncology through partnerships with advocacy groups and industry. SNO welcomes all those working to advance research and improve outcomes to be a part of this important conference. We look forward to seeing you in New York City!
