

What's Next for President Biden?

On Wednesday, President Joe Biden revealed his next big priority: The American Jobs Plan as he looks to make another big legislative push after passing the American Rescue Plan via budget reconciliation earlier in March. The American Jobs Plan contains many provisions focused on the climate crisis and building up the Nation's infrastructure, providing a potential framework for the next budget reconciliation bill.

Republicans in both the House of Representatives and the Senate have voiced their opposition to the plan even before it was released. They hope to campaign on the tax and spending increases that are proposed in the plan during the 2022 midterm elections, with the goal of retaking the majority in both the House and the Senate. Because of the opposition of Republicans, the Biden administration will likely once again have to use the budget reconciliation process to pass any sort of infrastructure legislation.

Budget reconciliation will require united support from Democrats all across the ideological spectrum, with some progressive Democrats calling for $2 trillion in climate change investments alone. Additionally, each member will have different and varying priorities that they will want included, which will likely lead to a drawn out negotiating process that will not have the speed and urgency of the American Rescue Plan.

While it is expected that infrastructure will now be the Biden administration's main focus, that does not mean that social policy such as health care will go out the window. It is expected that President Biden will unveil his health care plan sometime in April, making it entirely possible that major health care policy will be attached to any budget reconciliation legislation.

What Will President Biden Do About Drug Prices?

According to a recent Politico Pro analysis, drug prices have risen over the last few years even though it has been a popular campaign issue for members of both parties, including for both President's Trump and Biden. List prices only rose 4.5% for 832 branded and generic drugs in January 2021, compared to a 6% rise in January 2019, and a 5.2% rise in January 2018. However, while the prices continue to rise, the rate of increase slowed significantly throughout the Trump presidency due to his rhetoric and actions against the pharmaceutical industry. President Trump issued a number of executive actions that sought to lower drug prices. However, none of his proposals made it over the finish line, they were struck down by the courts or put on pause by the Biden administration.

Pharmaceutical companies have continually stated that any significant drug pricing reform will lead to slowing their ability to innovate new medicines and treatments. This argument has been consistent since drug pricing reform was put on the table.

President Biden has yet to release his own plan on how to lower drug prices, despite using the issue to campaign on during the Presidential election. As the next COVID-19 relief package draws closer, we can expect the conversation on drug pricing legislation to ratchet up between Congress and the administration.

H.R. 3 – Not Dead Yet

House Democrats are planning a “kitchen sink” approach for the next budget reconciliation package. This could possibly include infrastructure, climate change provisions, immigration reform, and drug pricing legislation.

House Democrats are talking about including H.R. 3 – Elijah E. Cummings Lower Drug Costs Now Act, the House Democrat's sweeping drug pricing legislation from the 116th Congress, in the next reconciliation bill. Should this legislation be included, it would be a huge win for Democrats and President Biden. Additionally, passing this sweeping legislation would allow Democrats to campaign on taking action against rising drug prices during the 2022 midterm elections. However, even if House Democrats can't get all Democrats on board to support H.R. 3, there are a number of other more moderate drug pricing proposals that could potentially be included.

Below is a quick refresher as to what is included in H.R. 3.

H.R. 3- Elijah E. Cummings Lower Drug Costs Now Act

The Seven Titles in the bill are:

- Lowering Prices Through Fair Drug Price Negotiation
- Medicare Parts B and D Prescription Drug Inflation Rebates
- Part D Improvements and Maximum Out-of-Pocket Cap for Medicare Beneficiaries
- Drug Price Transparency
- Program Improvements for Medicare Low-Income Beneficiaries
- Providing for Dental, Vision, and Hearing Coverage Under the Medicare Program
- NIH, FDA, and Opioids Funding

What does the bill do?

- The legislation has the Health and Human Services Department (HHS) directly negotiate the prices of the most expensive drugs, biological products, and insulin.

- The measure would cap the prices of the selected drugs at 120 percent the average price in Australia, Canada, France, Germany, Japan, and the United Kingdom. For reference, President Trump proposed a slightly less stringent price cap of 126 percent.
- The bill would require drug manufacturers to pay rebates to Medicare for drug price increases that exceed inflation.
- The legislation would create a $2,000 out-of-pocket cap for Medicare prescription drug plan beneficiaries.

How would price negotiations work?

- HHS would establish a Fair Price Negotiation Program that identifies “negotiation eligible drugs.”
- In 2023, the first year of the plan, HHS would publish a list of 25 drugs and biological products, along with insulin, that will be subject to negotiations.
- From 2024 onward, HHS will have to select at least 50 drugs to negotiate.
- HHS would select drugs with the greatest potential to result in savings for the government or individuals. It would do this by comparing the drug’s price in the US versus its average international price.
- Drugs subject to negotiation would be selected from a list of 125 drugs with the greatest net spending under Medicare Advantage, Medicare Part D, and an additional list of 125 drugs with the greatest overall spending in the US.
- HHS would then negotiate a “maximum fair price,” which is not to exceed 120 percent of the average international price. The maximum fair price would consider the manufacturer’s research and development (R&D) costs, unit costs of production and distribution, and comparison to existing therapeutic alternatives.
- If a drug lacks international price information, the maximum fair price would be capped at no more than 85 percent of the average manufacturer price.
- If a manufacturer sells above the maximum fair price, it would be subject to a civil monetary penalty equal to ten times the difference between the price they charged and the maximum fair price amount. Additionally, each violation of a fair price agreement could be subject to a civil penalty not to exceed $1 million.
- If manufacturers do not enter an agreement with HHS, H.R. 3 would impose a non-deductible excise tax on the company for the days they sell the selected drug outside of an agreement.

How does this affect brain tumor drugs?

The bill would cap the prices of the most expensive drugs sold in the US. To the extent that brain tumor drugs qualify as such, then H.R. 3 would reduce their prices. The bill applies to Medicare plans, which cover cancers drugs through parts B and D—both would be subject to negotiation.

Drug manufacturers will argue that lower drug prices will undermine the innovation necessary to find new breakthrough drugs to treat conditions like brain cancer. Consumer advocates will say that the bill increases access to life-saving medicine. With regard to the claim that the bill would hurt new drug development, the legislation contains provisions that account for R&D costs and innovation when negotiating the maximum fair price. This combined with the fact that manufacturers sell the same drug for less abroad undermines the claim that high prices are necessary for innovative drug development. Consequently, do not expect research into brain tumor drugs to suffer as a result of lower drug prices.

The Congressional Budget Office estimated that the plan would lower spending by $456 billion over ten years with the inflation rebates saving another $36 billion. But it would also result in eight fewer new drugs being introduced to the US market over that same period.

President Biden’s Health and Human Services Leadership Takes Shape

President Biden’s pick for HHS Secretary, Xavier Becerra, was confirmed by the Senate on Thursday, March 18, 2021. His confirmation makes him the first Latino HHS Secretary. The confirmation vote was narrow, with Becerra being confirmed favorably 50-49 with Sen. Susan Collins (R-ME) voting with the Democrats. Republicans generally did not support Becerra due to his views on abortion rights and lack of experience in the health care space.

In addition to Secretary Becerra, a number of top health officials were confirmed throughout the month of March. Dr. Vivek Murthy, President Biden’s pick for Surgeon General, was confirmed and then subsequently sworn in on March 25th. Murthy previously served as Surgeon General in the Obama administration.

Dr. Rachel Levine, President Biden’s pick for Assistant Secretary of Health, was also confirmed by the U.S. Senate on March 24th by a vote of 52-48, with Senators Lisa Murkowski (R-AK) and Susan Collins (R-ME) voting with the Democrats. She is the first transgender official to be confirmed by the Senate in the Nation’s history.

H-1B Visa Program Update

On March 3, 2021, Senator Chuck Grassley (R-IA), Ranking Member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, joined the committee’s chair, Senator Dick Durbin (D-Ill.), in sending a letter to the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) urging the agency to retain and expeditiously implement the H-1B selection rule published on January 8, 2021. This comes after President Biden has yet to make a move to reverse some of the Trump administration’s immigration rules that were issued during his final days in office.

It is widely speculated that immigration reform could be a significant portion of the next budget reconciliation package, utilizing the framework President Biden released on his first day in office. His framework was subsequently turned into the U.S. Citizen Act of 2021 and introduced into both Chambers of Congress by Rep. Linda Sanchez (D-CA) and Senator Bob Menendez (D-NJ). You can view the framework HERE.

PRG will continue to monitor this issue and provide updates as necessary.

What’s Going on With President Trump’s Flurry of Final Rules?

Former President Trump issued a number of health related rules and regulations in the final days of his administration. On President Biden’s first day in office, he issued an Executive Order that stopped, or put a pause, on any regulation that was finalized in the final days of the Trump administration. Consequently, there are a number of health related regulations that are currently in limbo, with the Biden administration having not made a decision as to whether they will move forward. Below you will find relevant health related regulations and their current status.

Regulation encouraging primary-care coordination for seriously ill Medicare beneficiaries

The model was originally set to kick off on April 1, 2021.

Status: Delayed as of March 8.

Regulation establishing an alternative payment model for rural health

Status: Application deadline extended through May 11, 2021.

Regulation barring PBMs from keeping Medicare Part D drug rebates

Status: On pause. The rule now won't fully take effect until at least Jan. 1, 2023.

Regulation cutting 340B drug discounts

Status: On pause as of March 19. The rule was slated to take effect Mar. 22. But the Biden administration delayed its effective date until July 20.

Regulation changing outpatient drug prices

Status: No action yet.

Regulation expanding value-based drug pricing

Status: No action yet.

Regulation covering breakthrough medical devices

Status: On pause until May 15, 2021. The Biden administration will continue to take comments on the proposed rule until April 17, 2021.
